- OIDEL: IPPE Project on Parental involvement within the school, which final presentation was held in Madrid in December 2011. This study, lead by a consortium of seven countries (Italy, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, Romania, United Kingdom and Switzerland) was then enlarged to 15 countries in total, representing 82% of the European school population and circa 50% of the Swiss school population. The main objective was to create indicators on the participation of parents - that do not exist so far – in order to include them in the 12 indicators related to the measurement of a quality education. A colloquium, presenting the approach and pre-final results took place in Geneva in 13 September, at the Palais des Nations. Among the main achievements of the study, an Observatory of parents’ participation was created that can be consulted on line: www.parentsparticipation.eu

Training sessions

A seminar on the right to education was held on 4 April in Geneva, lead by Alfred Fernandez. More than 20 people attended this session that was divided into four main parts: International context, international norms on the right to education, contents of this right (4 characteristics) and eventually the rights-based approach.

UNESCO Chairs meeting: Bergamo (Italy) - March 2011

The purpose of this meeting was to know the priorities of the Special Rapporteur, Mr Singh, and explore opportunities for collaboration with UNESCO Chairs.

Clearly, cooperation between such Chairs and the Special Rapporteur is advisable for advancing the right to education and human rights education. It also appears important to work with civil society and especially the NGO Platform on the right to education that was recently established in Geneva.

Possible areas of collaboration that were discussed are the following:

1. Establishment of a coordinating structure of the Chairs with the Special Rapporteur
2. Reflection work / research on priority issue at the global level
3. Collaboration to promote training in Human Rights at University level through the rights-based approach
4. Articulate correctly the right to education and human rights education.
